THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1866.

Why 60,000 Citizens Did Not Vote. The city of Philadelphia contains a population of nearly 900,000 souls. The proportion of the total number of residents who were liable to the draft was one-fifth. As none but voters were subjected, we may safely infer that one-fifth of the population are entitled to the right of suffrage; for those under twenty-one who were exposed to conscription are certainly counterbalanced by those whose age, exceeding forty-five, made them exempt. Taking this as the proportion, we would have in Philadelphia some 180,000 voters. In this inference we think we are within bounds. One Representative was apportioned to every 127,000 in 1860, and we generally have some 22,000 votes polled in each district, which is a trifle less than one-fifth of the residents. Having, then, 160,000 entitled to the right of balloting, we find that in the most exciting contest ever carried on in our municipality, and the one in which the largest aggregate vote ever polled was deposited, that there were but 100,698 ballots cast. There were 60,000 who were authorized by law to exercise the privilege, and yet declined for certain reasons to do so.

The inquiry into the cause which deprives the State of the voice of one-third of her citizens is one in which the public weal is really involved, and the proper remedy for the evil cannot but infuse new life into our body politic. What, then, is the reason that this large proportion declined to come to the polls? We think that the great cause is found in the fact that, as they had no voice in the selection of the candidates, they felt little or no interest in the success of either party, and therefore declined to take the trouble to cast a ballot when they cared not which won.

In the choice of nominees for the parties the great body of the people are not consulted; they have no voice. They are led like "dumb driven cattle," and it has long been the custom of the party leaders to lay the whip on the shoulders of all who do not tamely support all those selected for them. There never was an oligarchy more despotic, and at the same time more intrinsically mean, than that which, under the cloak of Democracy, compelled millions of American citizens to accept the decrees of a score of men, at the risk of being ruled out of the party. The voters are not to-day consulted in the selection of candidates. We are told on every side of parties of roughs swaying the primary elections, and driving gentlemen away, and this outrage is perpetrated by both parties. And it is because little interest is felt by the respectable part of the community in the triumph of either ring, that sixty thousand citizens of Philadelphia decline to attend the polls.

The time for the defeat of these autocratic demagogues has come. The thinking portion of the country are very tired and disgusted with the machinery of party; and especially is this true in our city. The day has gone by forever when it does a man an injury to scratch his ticket. It need be no longer concealed. It can be done openly, and all the wrath of the wire-puller defied. It was done on Tuesday by tens of thousands of our citizens, and we venture to say that there was hardly an intelligent man of either party who did not in at least one instance break party discipline.

This fact shows that the trammels of partisanship have been broken, and that the whip has lost its terror. When a bad man is nominated by either party for any local office, it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to oppose him with all his strength. When a good man is nominated, whether by the Democracy or the Republican party, it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to lend him all the aid in his power. Unless there is some national issue involved, we should and shall support a man because of his personal fitness for the post to which he aspires. This year we have the election of a United States Senator, and on that account many gentlemen who feared to endanger the success of the party supported men who are utterly unfitted for the post of legislators, and elected them by a reduced majority. Next year the case will be different. The Legislature will be of State and not of national importance, and it will be the duty of every citizen to oppose the corrupt, the vulgar, and incompetent, and support the able, the honest, and the gentlemanly candidates.

That such is the case in our local affairs has been already decided by our people. Many ran far behind their ticket, while in some cases so great was the dislike to certain nominees, that we sacrificed districts because of the obstinacy of the Convention in selecting them. This was the case with State Senator, and, in one case, so far as a Legislative seat was concerned. It is because of the corruption, the chicanery, and the deceit which permeate party politics, that so many of the most valued of our citizens turn away in disgust, and decline even to vote. Now, this condition of affairs must be remedied. We must have the system of making nominations purified. And we give fair warning to the dominant party in local politics that they cannot count on electing any candidate next year unless he is the best man nominated. It will depend on the personal character of the nominee, and we heartily rejoice that the day has come when the endorsement of a Convention is worthless unless the man endorsed be a good citizen. When this reformation is fully accomplished, sixty thousand voters will no longer stay away from the polls.

Some of the Lessons of the Recent Campaign.

A PARTY can afford to be defeated in a good cause. Had the Republicans lost the victory in the late campaign, they could have consoled themselves with the reflection that they had contended for right principles and just measures, and that they had appealed to the nobler and better instincts of the people for success. No such consideration can mitigate the bitterness of the cup of defeat which is now pressed to the lips of our opponents. The manner in which they conducted the canvass was totally unworthy of the great issues involved in the contest. Discarding sound argument and considerations addressed to the reason and better judgment of the people, they seemed to rely almost wholly upon appeals to the brutality of the lowest and worst elements of the population. Their chief dependence was upon the prejudice supposed to exist against the negro. This prejudice was nourished and appealed to in such a way as must have filled intelligent and fair-minded men of all parties with disgust. One has now but to look at the placards pasted all over the city, to see to what disgraceful extremities this lowest form of electioneering was carried. How shameless, too, was the falsehood in regard to the bounties, and how persistently was it adhered to despite its demonstrated falsity!

A party which resorts to such measures as these for success, and then is defeated, loses everything. It has nothing to fall back upon. Its self-respect even is gone. But a victory achieved over such an array of fanaticism and brutal prejudice, and appeals to the lower and baser elements of society, is worth something. It gives one a new confidence in the intelligence and virtue of the people, and shows that the masses, after all, are on too high a plane of civilization to be reached by such influences.

Besides, these appeals to brutality begin to lose their power, even with those to whom they are addressed. The cry of "nigger equality" can never again be as effective as it was in this campaign. Like a scarecrow, it will soon cease to frighten even the silliest of birds. The people find that it is a mere electioneering trick—that it amounts to nothing. They see that, even though the editor and orator, Frederick Douglass, did walk in a procession with other gentlemen, still the earth continues to revolve on its axis as usual, and the Schuylkill and Delaware still flow down to the sea. It is a great thing to have broken the force of this ignorant and unreasoning terror. It is hard to frighten a man the second time over something that he finds to be harmless. Our enemies have "played out" on the negro question. They have displayed the "raw head and bloody bones" until they excite naught but derision.

The people have been educated by the contest through which we have just passed. Constitutional questions affecting the vital character of the Government have never before been so generally and ably discussed. And never before has so true an idea of republican freedom been held up before the masses. We have not only won a victory, but we have won it on higher and nobler grounds than in the past. The people are being prepared gradually and surely for the full triumph and realization of the essential principles of true democracy in our Government. Towards such a glorious consummation let us labor with a firmer faith and more tireless zeal.

The Downfall of the Democracy.

PENNSYLVANIA, Ohio, Indiana, and Iowa have settled the November elections. New York, New Jersey, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Missouri will sweep along with the popular current. There is no turning it back. Official patronage, the throwing of a postmaster here or a tax collector there, merely makes a ripple on the surface, but does not change the course or diminish the volume of the stream. The Democratic party, as a political organization, is doomed. It failed the people in the hour of national peril and struggle, and they will not trust it again.

Besides, it has placed itself athwart the progress of the age, and must go down. It is illiberal, reactionary, narrow, aristocratic. It looks backward instead of forward. It fails to comprehend the spirit of the times. It belongs to a bygone era—to times of darkness and despotism—and not to the growing light and more perfect freedom of to-day. Its old men are dying off, and it has no attractions for the young. Its days are numbered, its purpose accomplished, its mission ended. It has now nothing to do but to get itself out of sight as speedily as possible. The rites of sepulture are all that remain to it. The people will see that they are duly performed.

The Sunday Car Question.

In the Supreme Court, sitting in equity, this morning, Chief Justice Strong delivered an opinion upon this important question. The Court grants the prayer for an injunction of Sparhawk, et al., against the Union Passenger Railway Company, to prevent them from running their cars on Sunday. This is, of course, not surprising. Judge Strong has decided upon the statutory law in the case, but the decision of the Judge is carefully worded, so as not to interfere with the authority of the United States in any way. So the cars will continue to run on Sunday, unless the friends of the sanctity of the Sabbath can prevail upon a very wicked man, the Hon. A. Williams Randall, Postmaster-General of the United States, to withdraw his patronage from the companies running cars on the Sabbath.

PENNSYLVANIA FOR THE UNION.

BY A. J. H. DOUGLASS.

Hurrah for Pennsylvania! she's blowing up at last! Like a red inferno, molten, with Freedom's rushing blast! From all her mines the war-light shines, and out of her loaves and fishes she feeds the hungry throng; The glorious fire leaps higher and higher, till all the land is lit; From valleys green and mountains blue her yeomanry arise; And leave the forge burning, and the oven at their disposal; Up from highland and headland, they muster in forest and plain, By the breeze of their fiery beacons, in the land of Anthony Wayne! Hurrah for Pennsylvania! her sons are clashing hands, Down from the Alleghenies, and up from Jersey's banks; Juniors far to the Delaware, is winning her bugle base; And the Susquehanna, like warlike banner, is bright with stripes and stars; And the hunter seizes his rifle, and the boatman grands his keel, And the lover leaves his sweetheart, and the husband leaves his wife; And the women go out in the harvest, and gather the golden grain, While the bearded men are marching in the land of Anthony Wayne! Hurrah for Pennsylvania! through every vale and dale, Beating, like resolute pulses, she feels the tread of men; From Erie's lake her legions break—from Tuscarora's gorge; And with rattle and shout they are tramping out from brave old Valley Forge; And the marchers of Paoli the minute men march once more; And they carry the swords of their fathers, and the And they swear as they rush to battle, that never shall cowardly stain Dishonor a blade or banner in the land of Anthony Wayne! Hurrah for Pennsylvania! she fears no traitor horde; But wars on all her borders, by loyal souls and swords; From Delaware's strand to Maryland, and bright Ohio's plain, each freeman's hand is her battle brand, each freeman's heart her target. And she swears, like an ocean breaker, in fierce rebellion, that she will never yield; And she shivers its angry surges, and baffles its frantic wrath; And the tide of Slavery's treason shall dash on her in vain; Rolling back from the ramparts of Freedom—from the land of Anthony Wayne. Hurrah for Pennsylvania! We hear her sounding call— Ringing out Liberty's summons from Independence Hall; That tocsin rang, with iron clang, in the Revolution's hour, And 'tis ringing again, through the hearts of men, With a terrible glory and power; And all the people hear it—that mandate old and grand— To the utmost nation that Liberty rules the land! And all the people chant it—that brave and loyal word on the borders of Pennsylvania—the land of Anthony Wayne! Hurrah for Pennsylvania! And let her soldiers march Under the Arch of Triumph—the Union star-lit Arch! With banners proud, and trumpets loud, they come from battle-fields where hearts were shields, to bar the invader's way Hurrah for Pennsylvania! Her soldiers well may march Beneath her ancient banners—the Keystone of the Arch. And all the mighty Northland will swell the triumph train. From the land of Pennsylvania—the land of Anthony Wayne!
